

WILSON, UP EARLY, SHAVES HIMSELF

Goes Into Hall Half-Clad to Get His Shoes, and Then Eats Breakfast Alone.

A sleepy plainclothes man on the fourth floor of the Shoreham Hotel, rubbed his eyes vigorously at 8 o'clock this morning at an apparition that peered through a half-opened door, stepped gingerly out into the hall, half-clad, and grabbed a pair of shoes that had been left outside the door to be blacked. Mind the glasses and a few habilitments, the watchman had difficulty in recognizing the angular figure as that of the incoming President of the United States. It was Woodrow Wilson.

With his shoes in his hand, the President-elect slipped back into his room, got out his shaving paraphernalia, stropped his old-fashioned razor, and shaved himself.

Wilson went to bed at 11 o'clock last night. Mrs. Wilson decreed that he should go to bed at 11, and her husband obeyed. Mrs. Wilson saw that he went to his room at that hour, and then went to her room for rest.

People Astir Early.

Long before 8 o'clock the corridors on the fourth floor were occasionally peopled with eager folk. Most of the thirty-eight relatives were astir early and tip-toeing along the corridor, sought out their baggage from a heap of trunks, suit cases, and bags that littered the hallway. There were whispered conferences, subdued peals of laughter, and exchange of visits.

Miss Josephine Cothran, a grand-niece of the President-elect, was one of the very first of the Wilsons to be astir. She toddled up the corridor guarded by her colored "mammy". Miss Jennie Wilson, emerging from her room, engulfed the little lady in a laughing embrace, sitting down on the floor of the hallway, the better to exchange confidences with her. Miss Eleanor Wilson came out of her room carrying a big bolster over her shoulder which she swung laughingly in her sister's room.

James and Fitzwilliam McManister, Woodrow's two young sons of Joseph Woodrow, of Columbia, S. C., joined the Wilson girls in the corridor next. The two boys are great "pals" of the President-elect's daughters, and they scurried off to a corner of the hall to exchange experience, look out the window at the over-cast sky and excitedly comment on what the day would bring forth. Stuffed Col. Thomas H. Birch, who has acted as the Executive-elect's military secretary, Colonel Birch appeared in his full regalia of gold lace, gilt buttons and a sword. The Wilsons weren't used to seeing him in such style, and the younger folks, who are the chummiest sort of friends with the colonel, poked fun at him.

Short Time To Eat.

President-elect Wilson was ready for breakfast before his wife and daughters had finished buttoning up their dresses, and so he had his meal brought into his room. He finished it in no time, and was ready for the day.

"Good morning," he nodded to one of the newspaper correspondents who happened by just as Wilson was peering out into the corridor, watching the relatives sort out their baggage and noting with a smile their excited demeanor.

The correspondent said the prospects were good.

"That's fine," he remarked emphatically.

"Did you sleep well?" he was asked.

"I rested nicely—and I feel very well this morning."

At 9 o'clock 250 newspaper men clamored for admission and Wilson smilingly submitted to their questioning—and was particularly interested in their intellectual attempts to elicit from him the exact personnel of his Cabinet. Meanwhile a clatter of hoofs on the asphalt street below announced that the Essex troop of cavalry, personal escort for the incoming Executive, were assembling, ready for the trip from the hotel to the White House.

The thirty-eight relatives of the President-elect who were quartered all on one floor of the hotel had a personal interest in every move of their kinsman today—but they weren't noisy, so ex-

Inaugural Breakfast Is Eaten Alone By Wilson in His Room

President-elect Wilson had breakfast alone in his room this morning at 8:30. Mrs. Wilson and the three Wilson girls were dressing and the incoming Executive decided he wouldn't wait for them. Wilson's breakfast consisted of half a grape fruit, oatmeal, two raw eggs, and a glass of cool water—not iced, for the President-elect never drinks icewater. Moreover, he never drinks coffee for breakfast.

Between the oatmeal and the eggs, Wilson sipped a few teaspoonsfuls of orange juice.

cited about what was to happen at noon than were three servants of the Woodrow Wilson family, who journeyed from Princeton with the incoming Executive and Mrs. Wilson yesterday. All are young Irish girls. Two have been made of all work for the Princeton household for a year or so, and the third has been the cook. The two maids will form part of the White House establishment—one to act as maid to the three Wilson daughters and the other as Mrs. Wilson's maid. The cook is a great favorite with the Wilsons, but there wasn't any place for her in the White House, so just to show their friendship for this humble worker, Mrs. Wilson decided she ought to have a chance to see the inauguration. She will witness everything from the best possible seats, and as the personal guest of the family. Last night the cook and maids were quartered at the Shoreham Hotel.

The two maids were called to Mrs. Wilson's and the daughters' rooms shortly after 3:30, to button up their gowns. They carried several huge bouquets—flowers sent to the Wilsons by personal friends here and out-of-town. Before very long the whole corridor was littered with baskets and bouquets of blossoms, while the Wilsons sat in their room, looking over and rhapsodizing on their beauty.

TAFT TO DINE WITH PRESIDENT WILSON

Will Eat His First Meal as Private Citizen as Guest of His Successor.

The first meal of William Howard Taft after his return to private life will be had at the White House in company with President Wilson. President Taft will return to the White House after the inaugural ceremony, dine with his successor, and then go to the home of Miss Mabel Boardman, where he will meet Mrs. Taft, his daughter, Helen Taft, and his sister-in-law, Mrs. Laughlin and her two children. These will constitute the ex-Presidential party, which will leave the Union Station at 2:45 for Augusta, Ga.

The luncheon at the White House will be simple and will require only a short time, as President Wilson must be in the reviewing stand when the first of the platoon of regular army officers enters the court of honor.

Great Throng Sees The Wilsons Pay Respects to Tafts

A crowd of nearly 5,000 persons gathered in and about the White House grounds at 6 o'clock last evening to watch President-elect and Mrs. Wilson pay their first visit to the White House. When their automobile rolled up the path leading from Pennsylvania avenue a great cheer came from the crowd. The President-elect and Mrs. Wilson stepped quickly across the broad portico to enter for the first time the large lobby within the gilded metal doors. President Taft and President-elect

Wilson have met several times before. Their wives were strangers. At all times during the recent campaign the two men were most careful to observe all the amenities, and after November 5 there was never any indication that President Taft bore resentment toward the victorious candidate. The meeting in the White House was brief, formal, and pleasant.

Shortly after the Wilsons' arrival the Justices of the Supreme Court, two-thirds of whom President Taft placed on the bench, called to say farewell. Later he went to the home of Miss Mabel Boardman for dinner. Laughing, telling stories, and eating with unfeigned appetite, the President enjoyed himself for two hours and then returned to White House to work until early this morning, signing more commissions, bills, letters, and photographs.
